Foresight in EU Security Policy Speakers and Chair

February 23, 2023

Sarah Bressan is a research fellow at the Global Public Policy Institute (GPPi) in Berlin, where she contributes to the institute's work on peace and security. Her work focuses on international security, political violence, conflict analysis and prevention, as well as the role of data, technology, foresight, and evaluation in German and European foreign policy. Recent projects covered conflict early warning, scenario planning, forecasting, and foresight, German public opinion, the evaluation of small arms control in the Western Balkans and the prevention of violent extremism. She was the editor of PeaceLab Blog and has published articles on European foreign policy, the future of NATO, measuring violence and fragility, and the role of new technologies in conflict.

Prior to joining GPPi, she analyzed conflict dynamics in sub-Saharan Africa at Freie Universität (FU) Berlin and Mannheim University. She supported academic-policy exchange and diplomatic training programs at FU Berlin, the German Federal Foreign Office and the UN Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR), worked on conflict sensitivity in development projects with the European Investment Bank and the Institut Européen de Coopération et de Développement in Beirut and led intercultural exchange projects in Germany, Kenya and South Africa. She also co-founded "Better Think Tanking" an initiative that works with organizations to improve leadership and management practices in the non-profit sector. Sarah Bressan completed her studies in international security and political science at Mannheim University, University of Seoul, FU Berlin, and Sciences Po Paris.

Diana Ecaterina Borcea is currently a researcher at the High Level Groups (HLG), Centre Condorcet, Brussels. With an academic background in security and defence, she was previously worked in the Strategic Foresight and Capabilities Unit of the European Parliament's Research Services (EPRS), where her areas of focus included the role of foresight in EU policy-making and supporting parliamentary research & foresight analyses on the topics of organized crime and contemporary security issues. Before this, Diana worked for the United Nations Office for Disarmament Affairs (UNODA) and collaborated with the NATO Allied Rapid Reaction Corps (ARRC UK) and King's College London on an academic research initiative examining organised crime in the Russian-Ukrainian conflict of 2014.

Francesca Bosco is a Senior Advisor at the Cyber Peace Institute in Geneva. She has an International Law and Human Rights background and 15+ years' experience in working for international organizations (United Nations and World Economic Forum) on action-oriented research, capacity building and technical assistance in international justice, crime and security. She has developed her expertise on countering and preventing cybercrime and misuse of technology, focusing on opportunities, risks and threats created by new technologies (like AI, Web3, etc) specifically on vulnerable communities, like humanitarian and development NGOs. She has a long-standing expertise on leading programs to foster cybersecurity and increase cyber resilience via cyber capacity building. At the Institute, she is leading the strategic engagement in programs and initiatives leveraging multistakeholder cooperation (with civil society, academia, corporates, philanthropy and public institutions) to strengthen cyber resilience and secure digital transformation as enabler to achieve the Agenda 2030 and SDGs goals.

Antonio Missiroli is an Adjunct Professor at SAIS Europe and at Sciences Po (Paris). He has two honorary doctorates: from the University of Surrey and the National School of Public Administration in Bucharest. Dr. Shea is a regular writer, lecturer and conference speaker on NATO and European security affairs and on other areas of contemporary international relations. He holds a D.Phil. in Modern History from Oxford University (Lincoln College), 1981.

Adrienne Cheasty has joined the Europaeum as Public Policy Advisor, following an Academic Visitorship at St. Antony's College, where she was a founding member of the European Political Economy Project (EuPep) in the European Studies Centre. She was previously at the IMF, most recently as Deputy Director of the Fiscal Affairs Department, responsible for Europe. She established the IMF's Climate Change Policy Assessment program. Research areas include euro area fiscal-financial architecture, financial crisis management, debt issues, measurement of the fiscal deficit, and financial aspects of climate change. She also served on the board of the International Public Sector Accounting Standard-setters (IPSASB), where she advocated for the development of standards covering environmental assets and liabilities. She was a member of the World Economic Forum's Global Agenda Councils on Fiscal Sustainability and on Public Finance and Social Protection, and has taught at Harvard, Yale and Johns Hopkins.

Tracey Sowerby is the Scholars Programme Director at the Europaeum. She is a historian of early modern politics and culture. She has extensive experience of European universities and research institutes, including as principal investigator on an AHRC international research networking award (Textual Ambassadors) and a British Academy Rising Star (Centres of Diplomacy, Centres of Culture). She is also widely versed in academic administration and student counselling.

She has published a monograph on Richard Morison (Henry VIII's leading propagandist) and co-edited a collection of essays on early modern diplomatic practice. Her current research centres on the history of early modern diplomacy with particular interests in institutional change, cross-confessional diplomacy, and the role of culture in international communication.

Michael Wright is the Administrator at the Europaeum, of which he is the hub, ensuring that everything runs smoothly. He is the first point of contact for enquiries about the Europaeum.
